The action of the circuit judges in compelling the election officers to certify to returns that the officers swear have been cooked up and are absolute frauds, is creating a bitter prejudice in the minds of the people, and leads a well-known politician to say: "If the circuit judges have this power then there is no use in going to the expense call for troops and have the certificates made out at the point of the bayonet to whomsoever the judges decide they wish to elect. Does it not seem monstrous that you can be compelled to certify as true a statement that you have sworn to be untrue and fraudulent?
